FORTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

LAST SESSION.

SENATE.

Washington, 20.—The Senate reconsidered the vote disagreeing to the House adjournment resolution, yesterday, year 31, day 21. There was a discussion on Edmunds' amendment to make the term of office of Senators 12 years, to be in effect from December 23 to January 31. The last resolution was agreed to, 33 to 26.

The Senate bill refunding the 8 per cent. District of Columbia certificates into fifty-year 365 per cent. bonds, was amended making the rate 8 per cent., and passed. The amount is $891,000.

The Vice-President submitted a communication from the secretary of the Interior in response to the resolution of the House, passed by the House on December 15, 1879, with copies of the correspondence between General Schofield and Major Gardner, relative to the case of John John Porter; also from the secretary of the treasury a recommendation for an appropriation of $20,000 for publishing a centennial map of the United States and the territories.

On motion of Davis, his bill to relieve the United States treasurer from the amount of $28,000,000 charged to him on the treasury books and deposited with the several states under the act of 1856 was taken up. He said this money would never be called for by the United States as it never had been in times of great need. It was inconvenient to carry it on the books.

In reply to the convenience of the bookkeepers was nothing compared to the injustice of giving $28,000,000 to older states at the expense of those which were admitted since 1856. It was the original contract that the money should always be subject to call by the United States.

Garland believed the debt was outstanding. Kirkwood said that the twenty-eight states interested were willing to secure this $28,000,000. He now offered, as a second section of this bill, the substance of the 5 per cent bill, allowing the various states 5 per cent on the value of lands granted within their limit by military company warrants.

Thurman thought the 5 per cent bill should stand on its own merits. He objected to government giving away $28,000,000 to the states. It was government money; it is our duty to pay as fast as possible our $20,000,000 indebtedness; every dollar of the $700,000,000 or $800,000,000 due next year could be paid off in ten years with out unduly burdening people. Yet it is proposed to extend it for forty or fifty years and at the same time give away $28,000,000. Give away the public land, and increase the expenditure as we were doing, and the inevitable result of this policy is to create an irreducible public debt, to make our debt like the British perpetual annuity. He regarded a perpetual annuity as one of the greatest crimes that could be inflicted upon a nation. He opposed this bill as part of a system of legislation tending to bring on this bankruptcy.

Conkling thought Thurman's argument vitiated, like many other good arguments, by the incorrectness of his premises. In 1836 there was a surplus in the treasury, raised by taxes upon the population then existing. The surplus was deposited with the states then existing, subject to call by government. It was a call loan was taken from it by act of Congress, to the effect that the money should never be called for except by act of Congress and on due notice. The doctrine of estoppel warranted the assumption that when government, in times of great need, money, did not apply for this money, it, by this and various actions, produced the impression that it was not considered as part of the assets of government. It was stopped from claiming the money after forty years had passed, and the states had, with the knowledge of government, applied the money to various purposes. On resumption, it was considered as a gift. Conkling thought the past had sufficiently demonstrated that the people, the resources and the integrity of the country would make impossible any failure to pay the public debt.

Blaine regarded the act of 1836 as a great folly, resulting from the extreme theory that a surplus of revenue must be divided among the whole population. To recall the money now would be unjust, not only because of the lapse of time and probable outlawry of the claim, but also because the people who got the money would not be the ones called on to return the money. Men who then lived in benefited states had largely emigrated. The Senator from Oregon (Grover) would be called upon to return the share he got as a citizen of Maine, in which state the money was formerly divided per capita among the population. Blaine was not a citizen of Maine at that time, but he would have to pay his share of money now as a citizen of another state. No way of returning the money could be found. The debt of a former generation should not be placed on the generation.

provident and vice-president-elect, and all persons objecting to either house of Congress, shall take an oath that they have not procured or attempted to procure their election by bribery or fraud, and that they will not, during the term of office, permit any contribution to the employment of contributions, or of employes of the United States, for election or political purposes.

On motion of the committee on pensions, substantially a report of the majority in the Massachusetts case, declaring Loving entitled to the seat instead of Boynton. Laid over.

Price, from the banking committee, moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill repealing section 3,418 Revised Statutes, and abolish the stamp on the checks named in that section.

Mills raised the point that this was a matter for the committee on ways and means, and that the banking committee had no jurisdiction. The question of how money was to be taken from the people to support government, was a question for the consideration of the committee on ways and means.

California to preemption, (except lands reserved by competent authority,) were not enacted until March 1853. The presidential order of 1866, again reserving this island was, therefore, unnecessary, and only made assurance doubly sure. General Wright said: "The island is of very great importance to the defense of the United States and especially of the City of San Francisco, and even if the proposal act were intended to cede it to the city for its corporate use, which is not the fact, it would not doubt be for the best interests of the city for Congress to refuse such cession, since this island occupies precisely the point which is necessary to be fortified to prevent its capture or destruction by an enemy's vessel, which, in thick weather or a fog, might run past outer batteries."
